I vividly recall that dusty day in rural Cuba, surrounded by a small assembly of sharecropping farmers, all eyes fixed on the youthful and impassioned Fidel Castro as he spoke from the back of an old farm truck.

This moment unfolded shortly after Fidel had accomplished what no other Cuban leader had dared to attempt: confronting the formidable United Fruit Company.

He stood before the gathered crowd, passionately detailing how he had expelled this powerful corporation from the new Cuba, a move that resonated deeply with the impoverished farmers present.

With fervor, he announced his ambitious plan to restore the lands that had been unjustly taken from them, emphasizing that these farmers, who had long been landless and struggling, were the rightful owners of the very soil they had tilled for generations.

The air was thick with hope and anticipation as Fidel's words painted a vision of justice and reclamation, igniting a spark of possibility in the hearts of those who had been marginalized for far too long.

Fidel was known for his tendency to be verbose, even back then, yet on that particular day, one line from his speech resonated deeply with everyone present.
He locked eyes with the dispossessed farmers and declared, "They (United Fruit Cartel) want to bury us, not understanding we are but the seeds!"
This powerful statement encapsulated the long history of oppression that Cuban farmers had endured at the hands of the United Fruit Company, often referred to as Yankee Gangsters.
The audience, many of whom had experienced the harsh realities of feeling like outsiders in their own country, immediately grasped the significance of his words.

They understood that despite the attempts to suppress them, they held the potential for growth and resilience, much like seeds waiting for the right conditions to flourish.

The atmosphere was charged with a sense of solidarity and hope, as they recognized their shared struggle against the forces that sought to undermine their existence.

Fidel Castro's vision of revitalizing Cuba for its people was often misrepresented, leading to a narrative that painted him as an anti-American figure and a mere pawn of the Communist International.

This portrayal is particularly ironic considering Castro's genuine affection for America, which many seem to overlook.

During his later school years, he pursued studies in New York with the intention of becoming a dentist, a fact that contradicts the stereotype of him as a staunch communist.

Additionally, he was not just a political figure; he was also an athlete who received an offer to play in Major League Baseball and even dabbled in acting, appearing as a musician in the iconic television show "I Love Lucy."
These facets of his life reveal a more complex individual than the one-dimensional caricature often presented in mainstream narratives.
This isn't the right venue for such discussions, and given my current preoccupation with making rent through my latest collection, I'll allow this wave of social commentary to drift into the vast expanse of online discourse without my involvement.

However, before I take my leave, I want to share that I frequently reflect on a particular moment and often find myself quoting his insightful words, all without ever being labeled a Communist.

Perhaps this is due to the fact that few were truly paying attention to my musings, or maybe, like my friend Miss Kamala, I've simply taken a tumble from a coconut tree.

Let us not be burdened by what has been; and instead, dream of what can be if you buy my book and I can pay my rent - which already post due.
